Vinification

Once arrived in the winery, the grapes are crushed, de-stemmed, pressed and the must is hyper-oxygenated. The hyper-oxygenation is obtained by transferring the air to the must and by adding liquid oxygen to it. At this point, the whole substance, the anthocyanins released by the grape skins, are completely oxidized and, once taken to the fermentation, will precipitate to the bottom, leaving a nice light colour. At this point, at the end of the vinification, the product is sent to refinement, it is preserved on its yeast lees.
